Recreating front gardens for Victorian villas where original encaustic tiles for paths have been damaged or lost is almost impossible. Replacement originals are hard to find, tricky to match, and very costly. So a source of new geometric tiles recreating historic designs comes as a boon, especially from a company that provided materials for the walls of many London Underground Stations. H&E Smith's frostproof tiles will last several lifetimes and can be arranged as you wish.

5. NOËL, NOËL...

A wow at the RHS Chelsea Flower Show 2009, Noel Blakeman's innovative Spinning Seat is available in stainless steel or can be colour-matched to your choice. Each section spins 360 degrees around a central post to create a versatile socialising hub for up to eight people, and the segments also make perfect table tops for drinks and nibbles. Ideal indoors and out, with bespoke options, this is a high-end huge-impact product destined for serious contract work.

6. WHILE SHEPHERDS...

DESIGNER DAVID CHERRINGTON
 PRICES FROM APPROX £7,000

Blending seamlessly into gardens, fields and woodlands, whether used as an adult office or studio space, a children's hideaway or occasional spare room, David Cherrington's traditional shepherds' hut-style caravans can include solid fuel stoves, customised interiors and even electrics. As temporary mobile structures, planning permission is unlikely to be required except in the rarest of instances, and the company is always happy to advise customers.

This page features new, well-designed items for the garden in a range of different materials and prices. Featured items, which may be bespoke, are furniture, lighting, water features, supports, fencing, sculpture and other pieces or art, pots and screens.
